victed in the County Court at Somerville, N. J., yesterday of shooting and robbing Charles M. Dumas, while he was with his wife in an auto on the night of August 24th. The prisoner was immediately sentenced by Judge Case to fifteen years at hard labor. The trial attracted widespread attention among automobilists, and the big square surrounding the courthouse resembled a parking ground, motor cars from New Jersey and other States being lined up while their owners were inside, taking a lively interest in the fate of the young desperado, who had made a specialty of holding up automobilists. up automobilists.

After Dumas had got out of the car the hold-up man fired a sec-ond shot at him as he came in the glare of the headlights in front of the machine. Again he was saved by the bullet entering an auxiliary lantern on the line of his body. Diamond fired a third shot, which was deflected by the hood of the machine. The fourth bullet went wild and the fifth went clear through Dumas' left form.

The initials "C. M. D." on the watch led to Diamond's arrest, according to the testimony of William Cohn, a Philadelphia pawnbroker. After offering the watch Diamond gave his name as Charles Dossy to conform with the intials on the middle letter "M." The pawnbroker's clerk telephoned to the police. When they arrived Diamond turned his gun on himself, but before he could fire Cohn leaned over the counter and brought a policeman's nightstick Cohn leaned over the counter and brought a policeman's nightstick down on the negro's head with a force that felled him senseless to the floor.
